Task 3

- What skills can you bring to the project?

I think my strongest point is my communication skills, because for any BA it's extremely important to understand what other people are trying to say and to make sure everybody understands your ideas.

For example, in one of my recent projects I was working with a distributed team, with a lot of developers located in Eastern countries. I realized that in their culture people tend to say 'yes', even when they know the time estimations are not realistic and they won't be able to meet the deadline - just because it is not polite to say 'no'. So, I started asking more questions before making final decisions, and it really improved communication between the product team and the customer. That's why I think my communication skills can bring real value to this project.

Task 5

- In your opinion, what makes a project successful?

I would say that the main two factors for a successful project are having a committed team of professionals and good communication with the customer.

A year ago, I was working on a project with a great team, where people were both motivated and highly professional. However, there was a lack of communication with the customer and the requirements were unclear. As a result, the final product was not a great success.

Therefore, I think that a project is successful when both sides, the product team and the customer, communicate regularly and do their best to create a great product.
